

HIRING AND RETAINING A DIVERSE WORKFORCE

UPDATED FOR 2022

Whether you are preparing to hire for an OJT position or working towards a goal to diversify your general workforce, developing a good recruitment strategy is essential. Please take the time to read the following suggestions. Many of them came from construction firms and other organizations who have successfully grown a diverse labor force.

PREPARATION

✓ Educate yourself:

- The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission \(EEOC\) has great resources on their website with information about the laws related to equal employment opportunity.
- Learn about your own biases (we all have them!) so they will not get in the way of your hiring decisions. A great way to start is to take an Implicit Association test found on Harvard University's website. There you will find many research-based tests where you can check your own biases related to gender, race, age and more.
- Find some time to go through the Workplace Civility and Unconscious Bias resources found in the back of this document on page 10. These are great learning tools and training aids.

Articles and research about efforts in the construction industry

- Check out Dr. Maura Kelly's research on building a more diverse workforce in the highway trades in Oregon
- Diversity Toolkit: Your Guide to Best Practices for Recruiting a Diverse Membership, North America's Building Trades Union
- Providing Safety and Health Protection for a Diverse Construction Workforce: Issues and Ideas

- Local Construction Firms Tackle The Industry's Crucial Diversity Problem, Julie Littman, Bisnow Bay Area
- Why Diversity is a Key to the Construction Industry's Future, Bransfield & Gorrie Blog

Women in construction

- Safety & Health Empowerment for Women in Trades (SHEWT) partnered with other trades organizations in Washington to do a study to better understand the health and safety risks affecting tradeswomen at work. You can find a summary of their findings here.
- Women in Construction: Personal Protective Equipment, USDOL

✓ Create an inclusive work environment:

- Make sure your EEO Officer has access to quality training. Consider sending them to a EEOC Training Institute seminar or conference
- Develop strong policies and reporting systems related to workplace behavior expectations and ensure employees know about them and follow them. EEOC Checklist for Employers
- Train supervisors on how to respond when discrimination or harassment occurs on the project

- site.
- Train all workers on how to support each other and “call out” harassment when it happens. One example of this strategy is the “Green Dot” bystander intervention program. Researchers in Oregon are looking at how they can adapt it to the construction trades. See the report authored by Jessy Lyons and Lea Hegge for more information click here.
 - When working with subcontractors, make sure their workforce knows what behavior is expected on the project.
 - Survey your employees on a regular basis to assess the extent to which harassment is experienced on the projects and in the office. You may find the survey questionnaire used to evaluate the Green Dot program in Oregon helpful. Refer to pages 26-28 of this evaluation report.
 - Take steps to reduce the feeling of isolation among women and minorities to curb hostile attitudes and behavior. Make sure there is more than one underrepresented employee assigned to a project.
 - Consider starting a peer mentorship program or peer support groups. Use the tips provided by Oregon Tradeswomen, Inc. in Mentoring and Mentorship that Works for Tradeswomen.
 - Design benefits packages that are responsive to family needs. Provide access to dependent care referral services and flexible spending accounts.
 - Look at what is posted on the walls of your home office - are women, minorities and other underrepresented groups reflected?
- ✓ Be strategic with your marketing – Review your website and other promotional materials to see if they reflect a diverse workforce. Do you include photos of women and minority workers? Do you include a statement that you are an equal employment opportunity employer? Or a statement that you are committed to hiring a diverse workforce? It is likely that people who are thinking about applying for positions will look at your website. Including these statements and photos may reassure women and minorities that they are welcome at your company.
 - ✓ Create and keep a great reputation – If you build a reputation for valuing differences and providing an inclusive work environment, you will attract quality job applicants. This will lead to greater commitment and higher productivity from your employees.

RECRUITMENT STRATEGIES

- Build relationships with organizations and educational institutions who are likely to know qualified, underrepresented individuals who would be good candidates for your openings. Consider making a presentation to their participants/students about your company and the highway construction industry. The more you interact with partners, the more they will think about you when they come across someone who might be perfect for your company. Consider reaching out to colleges and technical schools that offer construction courses, social service organizations who serve women and/or minorities, churches/faith organizations, and other local community organizations. See pages 5-9 for Vermont referral sources.
- Contact local employers who hire seasonal workers during the winter months (i.e. ski industry, fuel delivery and snow removal companies) to see if there is an opportunity to speak with their workforce about your hiring needs for the summer months. This may be a win-win-win situation for both the employers and the workers.

- Participate in an established job fair or hold your own hiring event. The Vermont Career Resource Centers sponsor job fairs all over the state and will work with you to hold your own hiring event in their regional offices. See page 6 for the Career Resource Center contact information. Many of the area colleges hold job fairs in the springtime, including Vermont Tech who has an academic program in construction management.
- If you need drivers, reach out to the Employment Diversity in Highway Construction (EDHC) program at (802) 917-8388 or email Karen Brouillette. We've had hundreds of women and minorities receive funding from our office to help them earn their CDL. You can also contact the six licensed CDL schools directly. See page 7 for CDL school contact information.
- Feed the pipeline – partner with local schools and talk with students about the benefits of working in the industry. Host field trips to your offices or to job sites for schools or non-profit organizations who serve a diverse student body. Invite minority and female employees to represent the company at these events.

ADVERTISING TIPS

Consider the following when preparing to advertise:

- Include EEO language (i.e. An Equal Opportunity Employer) and consider including a statement about how your company values diversity.
- If you are adding photos to the advertisement, make sure to include women and/or minority workers in the photos.
- Include testimonials from current women and minority workers about how they enjoy working for your company.
- Try to put yourself in the candidate's position - what language/images would peak their interest?
- Get feedback on your advertisements from current employees.
- When you are deciding where to post flyers and ads for open positions, think outside the box! Post flyers in places like community centers, libraries, laundromats, childcare centers, farming supply stores, ethnic food stores and restaurants.
- Test your job ads. Find a digital copy of the last job ad you wrote. Highlight the text, right-click and copy it in its entirety. Use the website Gender Decoder and paste your job ad into the text box provided. The "Gender Decoder" will then tell you whether your job ad is feminine-coded (i.e. if your job ad is written with more of a leaning towards a female candidate), masculine-coded (i.e. if your job ad is written with more of a leaning towards a male candidate) or neutral (i.e. if your job has no leaning towards male or female candidates), based on the language you used to construct it.
- Make sure to save copies of your advertisements and when and where you placed them. You may be asked to provide them in a compliance review.

PRINT & RADIO ADS

Be strategic when advertising your positions. Find publications and other media that reach your target audience:

- Newspapers or newsletters (electronic or hardcopy) circulated in specific communities or neighborhoods. See page 9 for a list of print and online newspapers and newsletters by county.
- Local radio stations (one contractor told us that they reached qualified female candidates by advertising on a country radio station)
- Local television programming
- Church/Faith Organization publications
- School/College newspapers and other media
- Social service organization publications
- Some contractors have found success advertising in hunting or car selling magazines like Auto Trader.

ONLINE ADVERTISING - (also see pages 9 for a list of Vermont online newspapers and newsletters)

Vermont Department of Labor's (VDOL) Job Link

Employers can advertise open positions for free on the VDOL Job Link website or contact the regional Career Resource Center (see page 6) near you for more information.

Vermont Works for Women Job Board

Vermont Works for Women is a non-profit organization helping women and girls recognize their potential and explore, pursue, and excel in work that leads to economic independence. They have a job bank that is geared to jobs and opportunities in non-traditional careers for women. Employers can post positions for free. Visit Vermont Works for Women VT Job Bank for more information.

Helmets to Hardhats (H2H)

H2H helps military service members successfully transition back into civilian life by offering them the means to secure a quality career in the construction industry. Employers can register to post jobs here:

Craigslist.org

Craigslist remains one of the largest and most successful job boards in the world. It's hyper-local functionality and affordability make it a great option for online recruitment. Ads typically cost $15 per job listing to post for 30 days on Craigslist in Vermont. See Craigslist's Job Ads Guide for more information.

Facebook

If your company already has a Facebook account, using it to recruit new employees is an excellent and affordable advertising option. Facebook allows you to select the specific demographics and geographic range of your advertising and you choose the budget that you wish to spend, so you won't be surprised by any unexpected costs. Because Facebook also owns Instagram, this process will allow you to put ads on Instagram. Visit the Facebook Ads Guide for more information.

LinkedIn

LinkedIn offers the ability to create online job postings to advertise open positions at your company. These can be searched by job seekers throughout the LinkedIn network. Go to LinkedIn's website for more information on posting a job.

Online Job Post Sites

You may also consider setting up an account with a recruitment / job posting site, such as Indeed.com or Monster.com. Pricing for these services vary.
